In medieval Japan, popular arts often blended religious ideology and entertainment in order to educate, attract audiences, and solicit donations.

This talk will explore the Buddhist ideology of sōmoku jōbutsu ("plants and trees becoming buddhas") and its connection to the phenomenon of plant anthropomorphization. It will also consider the relationship of Noh plays such as Bashō to this phenomenon.

Haley Blum
MA: Asian Languages and Literatures
PhD Candidate, UBC